Not illustrated. 1873 Excerpt: .a song--I came quite near and watched him--saw his breast So bloodstained, and his ruffled throat Whence quivering music came into mine ears. Sparrows were chirping, starlings chattering there Up in the tower--coming thereto with worms To feed their young ones in their nest of straw. Suddenly the child stopped by two green graves.: A little one-- Ruth s brother s who did die Just at that age when little ones are prettiest: The other grave was Ruth s, all newly made, Marked by the newer love (if such a love Can e er be new or old); flowers of sweet hues Grew round it--newly set with care. The elder grave had but one buttercup Yellow as a sovereign on it: then there grew Hound it a row of faded mignonette. Sometime I stood there wondering why glad flowers Are planted by sad graves, where hopes and loves Unutterable are buried in the earth. Swift as a rill my pensive thoughts did run, As here my words, the symbols of them, run: --Our little life is made of clay and gold, HUMAN LIFE, 68 Poor dirt and muck mixed with fine azure and stars; Our souls are born and bred upon the ground, Have their nests there--like the skylark Who creeps from out the brownish spotted egg Hid in the grassy field, and gets his food Out of the muddy earth--then soars aloft Into the azure where the stars do dwell--Into the misty azure, and is lost...
