Be square! You look out what you say to me. But aint you going to keep your word Mickey, do you want your head busted Naw! But I did your work so you could loaf; now I want the pay you promised me. Lets see you get it! Better take it from me, hadnt you Youre twice my size; you know I cant, Jimmy! Then you know it too, dont you Now look here kid, its cause youre getting so big that folks will be buying quicker of a little fellow like me; so youve laid in the sun all afternoon while I been running my legs about off to sell your papers; and when the last one is gone, I come and pay you what they sold for; now its up to you to do what you promised. Why didnt you keep it when you had it Cause that aint business! I did what I promised fair and square; I was giving you a chance to be square too. Oh! Well next time you wont be such a fool! Jimmy turned to step from the gutter to the sidewalk. Two things happened to him simultaneously: Mickey became a projectile. He smashed with the force of a wiry fist on the larger boys head, while above both, an athletic arm gripped him by the collar. Douglas Bruce was hurrying to see a client before he should leave his office; but in passing a florists window his eye was attracted by a sight so beautiful he paused an instant, considering. It was spring; the Indians were coming down to Multiopolis to teach...
