His form is hideous. With forehead disfigured by offensive knots; his head repulsive by protruding, stunted horns; his cheeks partly enveloped by huge ears that threaten his shoulders; his short tail protruding from the middle of his body; his feet hoof-covered and cloven, and his hairy goat limbs swelling with great muscles. the Satyr presents a form ugly and repellant. He is a beast. He prowls the woods and seeks by force to destroy the purity of the woodland nymphs. He is a debauchee from his fondness for wine, yet shows the touch of the moiety of manhood in him by loving music and by his dexterity in the use of the flute and bagpipe. The Satyr is a terror to men....
