Rotten night, reflected the big man who monopolised the roomiest chair and the best position in front of the blazing logs. Going to town to-night? The question was general there were half a dozen answers. Every one was going in by the last express. All of them had dined well: they had been hungry and the club was a wealthy one; even the most exclusive of appetites could be entertained at the Faraway Country Club. The last bus was to leave the clubhouse at ten minutes past ten, and it was then half past eight. Ten minutes drive from the clubhouse on the edge of the little town to the railway station - then thirty minutes to the heart of the big city in which the members lived and died at great risk to themselves. Each succeeding spring saw the formal opening of the Faraway Country Club. The boards were pulled down from the windows and the door hinges were oiled properly after a winter of discontent. May saw the reopening, but it was not until June that crowds began to fill the house and grounds. Only the more restless and hardy had the temerity to test the pleasures of the raw spring days and nights. The M. F. H. Was a loyal, eager chap; he knew what was required of him in his official capacity. With the first symptoms of softening soil he led his followers through field and wood, promising the real hunt inside of a month. Following a pack of overfed hounds was what every one at Faraway Club called a real hunt. The night so meagrely described at the beginning of this tale followed hard upon...
