Not illustrated. 1916 Excerpt: . . . 1918 and 1919. and they havent got all those plants built yet. They are not selling the machinery they had; they are buying more, and they are getting more order than they ever got before. So when we sit here and talk about the end of the war, we can only hope for it, and God knows, everyone of us hopes for it, as a possibility. But, it may be said, why dont they make their own steel Belgium and France Steel Plants Gone Forever The first thing Germany did was to go and take Belgium and those parts of France where they had the finest steel works in the world, and they tell me what they did with those plants was to take what stuff they needed in them and ship it to Germany, and then burn the rest down, and those plants will never be replaced. If the war were over today, if Belgium were put back where she was before the war, her steel mills are gone, and those that were in France are gone, and they will never be replaced. Germany took what she could to Germany and blew up and burned up the rest, as she naturally would do. My prediction is that before the first of January that bar steel will be easily 2. 75 base, and that not later than the first of April it will be at least three cents base, if not more. It is not a...
