Excerpt: . is a caricature upon human decency, a living libel on mankind. I can only say that if a ball of tartar emetic, as big as the planet Jupiter, were thrown into the jaws of hell, they would not vomit forth in all the throes of their intestinal agony a more abject jumble of diabolism and corruption than the. chapter at this University. This was counted a masterpiece in its day and represented the dominant ideas regarding inter-fraternity relationships in America s centennial year. Q Froth from Chapter Letters is the title of a number of contributions to one of the fraternity magazines which possess unusual merit from the point of view of genuine humor. The collector arranges his extracts under appropriate headings, but the language 128 Bjfra 0#Ttt IE of the original writer is left unchanged. If chapter letters were published exactly as written, and that was the dire threat made by one editor last year, the material for this scrap-book of Froth would be far richer and far more abundant. As it is, however, the Shield of Phi Kappa Psi has developed something new in the line of college humor. The language of the present-day college student is notable for the limitations of its vocabulary. The effect of the war upon the classics is more and more apparent every year. College students seem to know nothing about root forms. They do not bother about synonyms. They can not spell correctly. The institution...
