Once in a dream I thought that from a hill I looked across a landscape wide and still. As slowly up the hillside twilight crept, An angel came to me; I thought he wept. Turning to those far fields he gave a sigh, And when I queried, thus he made reply. I trod earth s hills and vales long since, a youth, And prayed, Give me, my God, to know Thy truth, Great thoughts, indeed, the Father brought me then, And said, Bear thou this message unto men. The vision long I pondered in my heart, Dwelling in silence, from my kind apart. How exquisite, I said, how pure and fine, The form fit such a treasure to enshrine. In patience I endured, and slowly wrought While still the truth grew greater in my thought. At length I sought the haunts of men once more, And in my hands the written message bore. As through the streets I passed, now here, now there, I scattered leaves, just...
