By Edwin Atherstone

Forgotten Books, 2015. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . This book usually ship within 10-15 business days and we will endeavor to dispatch orders quicker than this where possible. Brand New Book. Excerpt from The Fall of Nineveh: A Poem Of the history of the Assyrian Empire, little is with certainty known. The bewildering antiquity of its origin, - the immensity of its dominion, - the splendour and gigantic bulk of its cities, and the utter desolation that, for long ages, has overspread them, invest the subject with the character of a magnificent dream. Yet that such cities as Nineveh and Babylon have existed, and with a grandeur perhaps never equalled, we can not but believe. The ashes still remain to prove that the Titanic forms have been; and surely the contemplation of their glory, and their destruction, cannot be idle; nor, to the sons of the richest and the proudest of existing empires, the least peculiarly interesting. Of the rise and the fall of this mighty power a brief history will be found among the Notes at the end of this volume.
