There is a marble angel in Cawnpore now, standing in a very quiet garden, and shut off even from the trees and the flowers by an enclosing wall. The angel looks always down, down, and such an awful, pitiful sorrow stands there with her that nobody cares to try to touch it with words. People only come and look and go silently away, wondering what time can have for the healing of such a wound as this. Afterward Sonny Sahib s father believed that all he could learn while he lived about the fate of his wife and his little son was written there. But he never knew. Sara Jeannette Duncan wrote only one children s book -- The Story of Sonny Sahib -- and it s a special and remarkable little story.
