Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Unmade in Heaven: A Play in Four Acts Unmade in Heaven was not written as an argument for or against the Roman Catholic faith. The subject simply presented itself to me as one of great human and dramatic significance and susceptible of powerful theatrical treatment. Whether its full effect is brought out by the bare and direct method of handling that I have adopted is doubtful; but I am certain that treated by a capable dramatist it could not fail to move an audience deeply. It is true that the average Protestant American playgoer has not much interest in the monastic life nor in the priestly vocation. The idea of certainly breaking a girl's heart for the sake of doubtfully benefiting humanity through the Church will offend most Protestant girls as well as Protestant men. They may be offended, but I do not see how they can fail to be interested, if the problem is presented in the shape of actual flesh and blood. For myself, I love and honour the Catholic Church, with certain reservations which it is not necessary to discuss here. I believe that the greatest need in American life today is the need of God.
